

Cookie Policy

What are cookies?

Computer cookies are small text files which get stored on your computer or mobile phone.

Essentially, they act as a 'memo' on websites. Cookies can be helpful as they can enable a website to remember your preferences and create a more tailored experience for you. In order to do this, they store information such as your name and email address. They can only store information you've already shared with us. For example, your name and email address (that you've entered when signing up to receive information from us).

What cookies are we using?

We only use cookies that we believe are necessary to provide you with the best experience. We don't use any type of advertising or third-party advertising (we don't advertise any products or services other than our own and do that only with your consent).

The cookies we use are only for functionality, performance and analytical purposes. For example we use analytical tools to track things like the number of visitors to our website, how they use our website and how many times they come back. This will enable to constantly review and improve our website and offering to you.

How to stop cookies...

If you're concerned about cookies, you can turn them off (on our site) when you're given the option to do so on your first visit to our site. Alternatively, you can turn off all cookies in your browser settings. You can do that for just our site (or all pages you visit). Search the settings section of your preferred browser to see how to do this.

If you have any particular concerns about the cookies we use or would like more information please email us: info@tcha.uk

V2. Sept 2020.